

Don't Put that RV Away for the Winter Just Yet

By Robin Chilson

Erie Times Express, Oct. 8, 2010

Sure the kids have headed back to school, but that's no reason to stop RVing. Don't put that RV away just yet. There are still lots of fun weekends in October that are perfect for camping. Yes, the leaves are starting to change and the evening air is a little crisper than it was a few weeks ago, but camping in the fall season can be the best camping ever.

A campfire is even more enjoyable when that evening air has some chill in it. It's a great time of year to sit around the campfire, drink warmed mulled apple cider, and tell ghost stories. Our family used to pick apples and then make homemade apple desserts to enjoy while camping. There's nothing quite like a hot dog and hot apple pie off the campfire. It is the flavor of the season.

But that's not all. The leaves are changing and it's a beautiful time of year to go fall-foliage watching. The leaves usually peak somewhere around the first week of October. Don't forget your camera. Many counties have driving tours.

Why stay home and miss all the fall fun? You can go camping and enjoy the festivals of the fall season.

And just because there's a chill in the air and you don't own an RV is no reason to stay home. Why don't you go on a fall getaway? Many private campgrounds have rental cabins equipped with heat, bathrooms and more. You can enjoy all the convenience and fun of the campground activities, fall foliage, local festivals at the lower autumn prices. It's a great time of year to have a little getaway.

There is still a lot of fun camping weekends ahead for the month of October. Don't miss all the fun of the fall foliage, fall festivals and special events. Go camping and explore the world around you. You'll make memories that last a lifetime.

Reprinted with permission from Times Publishing Company, Erie, PA. Copyright 2010